"I demonstrate my Values-based Atmosphere in every moment, for it emanates from within me. It is felt by every person, my family, friends, all people, animals, and every living thing. It is fully visible in my environment."

Nurturing Hearts and Educating Minds

Cooperation Game, Cambodia

For many people concerned about values, it's apparent that talking about values is important, but not enough.

This is particularly true for values educators. All of us are educators of values because of the example we set and the values we express in them. Just as we learn from the actions and examples of others, by the way we behave and live, we influence and may leave a lasting impression on others. We are responsible for everything we create.

"My Values-based Atmosphere defines who I am, what I stand for, my purpose, providing a continuous perspective of opportunity for change and growth."

"It is not just our actions and words that affect others, but also the tone of our voice, facial expressions, mood, frame of mind, attitude, and most importantly what is in our heart."

Teaching Practice: Collaborative drawing, Cambodia

It is in such an atmosphere, or values-based learning environment, that values may be caught, felt, and experienced. When values touch the heart in such a way, there is fertile ground in which values may also be taught, not only taught but also sought as students and teachers alike embark on a journey of self-reflection, looking within and asking themselves what values are most important to them and why.

The choice of values then becomes a conscious choice, one which can be explained by the head as well as being embraced and experienced by the heart.
